Project Restoration 6 Cambridgeshire

An old encaustic tiled floor covered for many years with lino that had been stuck down. The stone surround had been damaged by moisture that had been unable to dissipate into the air causing a breakdown of the stone. The encaustic tiles needed very careful cleaning due to their fragile nature and all this was done by hand to avoid any damage to the tiles, because the tiles had been covered for so long the moisture had created a mould. So the tiles had to be treated to stop the mould from returning. Once cleaned the tiles were treated with Fila impregnating seal to protect them from staining and a colour enhancer was applied to bring out the colour in the tiles. A wax was then applied and the floor was polished.
